

Gabriel Copeland's husband, a police officer is shot during a robbery. She sets out to get revenge on the people who she considers responsible for his death.... When Special Agent Ward Jansen gathers his staff, he writes the words "Act IV" on the black board and exclaims, "In Shakespeare's Henry the Sixth, Act 4, Dick the butcher exclaims, 'The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.' In Shakespeare's play this is said in jest, but in our case, we have someone who is very serious. We need to find this person. We know, from the evidence, that this person is someone who believes very strongly in our laws. We also know that this person is working from some type of a list, by the way he is moving around the country. We need to find out... What would change a law abiding citizen into a serial killer, one who is out to kill the top defense attorneys in the country!"
