

“Whose Principles... yours or the countries? When I ask the question, Whose Principles? This is what I am referring too. For the past number of years, it seems that there are people who are forgetting about our country and for profit, greed or politics; they are inserting their own principles into our society. On this basis, we are losing sight of just what made this country great.”

This is the statement Ray is confronted with when he finds himself caught between a gang leader and a group of disabled veterans. Will he act on his own and use his skills as a Special Forces sniper... or will he join up with the veterans and follow the rules that made this country great?
